We focus on buylists here at Quietspeculation for a number of reasons. I primarily look at it as this is the bottom line price I can get if time is a crunch. In essence though - all we do is: target, buy in, hold, execute exit strategy. Rinse. Repeat. This familiarity brings confidence I can cycle. Expectations rise and we want to have the same success from the previous time. If we haven't done this enough, let's say we make a mistake. The result we get isn't exactly as hoped for, much less expected. We beat ourselves up, and often people will question us why we do something they have no confidence in themselves. They don't know a thing. It's unsure. Untested to them. And now, you've shown the negative side. How do we keep on track?

By simply starting again.

We do the same thing over & over again - because they work. If you have fallen into a trap, and something just isn't working for you - break it down. Target. Buy-in. Hold. Execute Exit Strategy. You made a mistake somewhere along those lines. There's only four steps. Just take a good hard look at all of them. Did you target the right card?

[cardimage cardname='Thoughtseize'] [cardimage cardname='Duress']

One of these things is not like the other

Take the time to hone your game. Take the time to sharpen you. You're the key cog in this wheel of finance. Sometimes it's not all about the cards we speculate on. Sometimes it's also about the things we do, behind the scenes - that make all the difference in how we move forward, or how we should move forward. Find what works for you. Rinse. Repeat

-Till next Time

Let me highlight the most important message in it: “the most important tool in Magic Finance is that space in between your ears.”

Look at it the otherway, then – If not this topic, P.Trader – than what would you like it to be on?

And yes, Pi – the MOST IMPORTANT tool is that space. If you aren't constantly working on making better decisions, analyzing the data better, looking for more efficient thoughts, and figuring out cards/markets better – what good is any spec targets that I give you? It will just be wasted.

I miss something in this article.

My first thought was: “of course we need to use our brains, so what next?”

Maybe I miss a more focused angle on this message.

How can we make sure we use our brains more.

For example: a wrong speculation, how do you make sure you learn from that?

How to better analyze data?

My key take away here is "Have a plan". Don't just buy and pray.
